

Circular No.6/1962

Sub:- Incomplete nature of reports – submission of – subordinate officers.

During the camps and field inspections of the Chief Conservator of forests, it is common that the local officers point out the urgency of field operations (eg. Planning works, extraction, roads, buildings etc) and that the works are delayed pending final orders from the Chief Conservator of forests. The interest and enthusiasm shown by the officers in the timely execution of the works are highly appreciated.

2. But the Chief Conservator of forests is sorry to point out that report submitted to him and omission of certain important details. In some cases Government sanction will have to be obtained and those will be subject to scrutiny by the Administrative Department and also sometimes by the Finance Department.

3. The officers in charge of the work may have a complete idea about it, but unless a comprehensive and clear report touching all aspects in given, it will be difficult for the Chief Conservator's office and the Government to pass any definite order. For example, all cases where Government to pass any definite order. For example, all cases where schedule of rate for a particular work does not exist have to go to the Government for approval. To convince the Government about it, the reasonableness of the rate, as well as how the rate was arrived at have to be explained. But as a rule such details are not provided while submitting reports. Any number of such omissions can be pointed out. Thus a great extent, the delay in getting final orders is mostly due to the lack of clarity, insufficiency of details etc., in the reports submitted.

4. The procedure followed in such cases may seem cumbersome, but it is to be noted that it is meant to make the matter fool-proof has to be followed by all means.

5. Therefore, while appreciating the earnestness and enthusiasm of the officers, the Chief Conservator of Forests would request them to make sure that they have supplied all the required details so that orders can be passed without any delay caused by further correspondence. It is hoped that all the Officers would fully co-operative in this.
